

ABSTRACT

Methods and compositions for the production of recombinant proteins in a eukaryotic cell line are disclosed. The methods and compositions are particularly useful for generating stable expression of recombinant proteins of interest that are modified post-translationally, for example, by glycosylation. Such proteins may have advantageous properties in comparison with their counterparts produced in non-human systems such as Chinese hamster ovary cells.